Good day

Please see attached Studbook application form and fees, please send it back to me with Proof of payment and I will send it to Studbook. Please note that the bank details for the payment are directly to Stud Book and not to SABGBA.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION:

Color Plate System - No animal is plated without an ID plate (Year + no - eg 23-01)

Blue - A registered animal that phenotypically meets the requirements of a stud animal as well as the registration timeline requirements as communicated

Green - All flock animals (including Type D breeders)

Flock Inspection report codes as follows

K - Flock conformation (all animals with flock conformation regardless of registration)

KR - Flock Registration (Stud conformation, does not meet registration requirements - All breeders, including Type D breeders)

KSP - Flock Teat (Stud Conformity, Flock Teats)

KK - Flock color (Stud conformation, Flock color)

This is noted on the inspection report with the above codes.

Red - "Fit to Travel" plate - no obvious bucking faults and meets minimum requirements for export purposes (applicable to animals too young for inspection)

Farm inspections - Breeder must request if he/she wants to have his herd of goats plated - breeder responsible for cost of plates from July 2024* - Inspection day fee is R100 before VAT and R2/animal before VAT payable to SABGBA.

STUDBOOK:

Selection system: Any section A ewe born before 2024 can get a stud plate. Doesn't matter if she is selected after 2024.

Any section B ewe born before 2026 can get a stud plate. No matter if she after 2026 not be selected.

Any section A ram born before 2023 can get a stud plate. Doesn't matter if he is selected after 2023.

Any section B ram born before 2024 can get a stud plate. Doesn't matter if he is selected after 2024.

All the animals retain their stud plates and can participate in national and world shows.

Studbook not mandatory. Studbook mandatory for participation in national show and national auction. A stud book registered goat that phenotypically meets the minimum requirements of a stud goat is plated with a blue plate and is known as a stud goat. If you are not a member of studbook you are type D breeder. Type D breeder can participate in production auctions. No national participation. These breeders' goats are also inspected and the animals that phenotypically meet the minimum requirements are plated with a green plate. These animals are known as approved animals and are not called stud animals. Only studbook registered animals that phenotypically meet the minimum requirements of a stud goat are known as a stud goat.

PLEASE READ THE FOLLOWING SECTION CAREFULLY TO COMPLETE THE PEDIGREE FORM CORRECTLY:

At point no. 24 they ask for your herd identification, this is just your stud number which was assigned to you upon joining the society and can be found in the membership letter. So it is mandatory to first join the society, receive your stud number, and then join SA Studbook.

At point 25 they ask for prefix options, here you can enter any name that has meaning to your stud. E.g. Your stud name, farm name, own initials.

Please provide more than one choice as a prefix is allocated per breeder. The prefix may only belong to one person across all the races that register in SA. It may not sound the same as someone else's and it may also not be used for 10 years after someone has resigned. So a prefix is like a brand, the breeder's "property" can only be said and may not be used by someone else/another breeder. An owner of a prefix may then register his own different breeds with the same prefix, provided the membership name and ownership are exactly the same.

If you already have a registered prefix with SA Stud Book, you only need to pay the joining fee + VAT. If you have purchased goats from breeders who have already had them recorded in the Pedigree, you can fill in the animals' complete ID numbers on the last 2 pages of the application form. Complete IDs work as follows: the stud number under which animal was selected or born - year of birth - sequence number. The number on the steel plate is usually the stud number and the numbers on the plastic plate the year of birth and the serial number.

If the goats have not yet been registered with the SA Stud Book, they can only be registered as base animals with an inspection report. They will then be recorded under your stud number. But this takes place via an inspection report that is completed during an inspection.
